A PONTOON RIVER CROSSING. Dimensions of a Drawbridge Acros

the Mississippi. (From the Minneapolis Times.) Prairie du Chien, Wis., Janii 25.—The new pontoon buit here durling the fail was successfully launched and the ceremy was witnessed by about 1.800 people At the signal given by A. D. Campbell, who had the construction in charge, the vables were cut and the large boat slid majestically into the water over 100 fee

Way. This pontoon is 408 feet long, 40 feet wide, 6 feet deep, with a height of about 30 feet, and has a draught of 12 inches. It 30 feet, and has a draught of 12 inches. It is the largest draw netween Dubuque and La Crosse. It was built of fir which was shipped from the State of Washington for that purpose. The cost of this great structure is about $40.008 and a force of over 100 men were employed for nearly three months in its construction.

The pontoon has great buoyancy and strength, being provided with a Howe truss, passing through its entire length. When trains pass over it the draft will be increased to eighteen inches. The extreme rise and fall of the Mississippi River is twenty-one feet, and to over-

River is twenty-one feet, and to over-come the variation in height of the places between the pile bridge to which the pontoon is attached, aprens or movable tracks have been provided which are adjusted by means of powerful hydraulic jacks, and movable blocks which will be operated by the men in charge of the ridge. The connection between the ends f these aprens and the track of the bridge is a simple device counterbal-anced by equal weights so one man can clamp and unclamp the end of the pen-toon when swung in or out of position.

The "draw" is attached at one end to a piling forty feet from the end of the sta-tionary bridge by an arm as long as the "draw" is wide. About this piling or pivot, the "draw" will swing, describing in its course an are of 50 degrees, and when open, lie at right angles to the piling and entirely out of the chaneal. This draw was placed in the west chan this draw was piaced in the east chan-nel a new one being put in the east chan-nel a year ago. The draw openings of the bridges in either channel are the oily ones in one section on the Mississippi River which will permit a steamer and large raft to pass through. Other draws swing half to one side and half to the other other.

The closing and opening of these pontoons is effected by a twenty-horse power engine situated on the draw working a simple winch, around which is wound a chain, the extremities of which are secured to a cluster of pilings above and below the pentoon so fixed as to give a diagonal lead across the stream. The bridges open with the current in one minute and close against the current in three minutes with-out showing any undue strain or requiring the application of more than five-horse the application of more than five-horse power. In relation to the passage of trains it has proved to afford greater security than the old-style draw bridges, for the pontoon is capable of floating a weight six times greater than that of an ordinary

LONDON'S "CATS' MEAT" MEN. A Queer Industry by Which Fortunes Are Amassed.

Are Amassed.

(Frem the Londen Daily Chronicle.)
In view of the dinner to the cats' meat men of London, which is to take place soon, the following facts, supplied by one who claims to know much of the class which purveys meat for the demestic pet, may be of interest.

Two cases which have within the last few years come before different courts of may be of interest.

Two cases which have within the last few years come before different courts of law simply show how profitable a trade, in London at least, supplying cats' meat is. In one of these cases, a probate suft, a certain testator had left £2500, every penny of which had been practically made in a little over twenty-seven years by means of west End cats' meat round, which the testator had originally acquired for a cayment of £20, from his father, who, according to one of the witnesses, spent a fortune in "following horse races." The same wilness declared that the testator would have left twice as fouch as he did but for luckless operations in music hall and public home property. The other case was one that came before the magnitude at Southwark. A comely young woman of about twenty-five years of age appeared in the witness hox with a profuse display of really fine diamonds. The magnistrate at that time Mr. Fenwick—seemed astonished when the witness told him that she was a "domestic animals butcher," and further questions elicited the fact that her father had left her the business two years before, and that she cleared out of it allo a week regularly.

To those who have enquired into the years before, and that she cleared out of it zio n week regularly.

To those who have enquired into the facts of this trade such a statement would represent but a commempiace. A cats meat round has frequently yielded anything from £30 th £400 when it came into the market, and there is one well-known West End round that changed hunds for £1,200 about a couple of years ago. But this trade, like most of the best rounds having been in the hands of the same faturilles during three or four gener thous. The huge buildings let out into the so common, have increased to value of cats' meat rounds to extent. One single building a reckened to be worth £20 a himself by the "purveyor." sole right of supply, and the exceptional case, other grants are proportionately.

reckones to be worth account in himself by the "purveyor," sole right of supply, and, the exceptional case, other at flats are proportionately tain public buildings, like tones in Whitchill, have a la around comes into the mine.

It must always be recollected thus, though most of the purveyors buy daily in one great central market, yet are the varieties and quantities of meat they acquire almost its much diversified as in the case of meat for human beings, and the West End cats' meat provider obtains prices that would be absolutely impossible even in genteel villadom. But, in regard to the latter class, there is a Dulwich cuts meat man who is a property owner on a very expensive scale; and another South Lengon dealer who still does his own buying and delivering, has storn a university of extensive scale; and another South Lengon dealer who still does his own buying and delivering, has storn a university of extensive scale; and another South Lengon dealer who still does his own buying and delivering, has storn a university of extension of certain of his sous, one of whom is a theregonan.

Those of the public who may imagine that there is no room for initiative and in genuity in the caus meat trees are wasty mistaken. In Kensington an enterprising young fellow is said to be making a fortune through the happy idea of supplying on request, fish instead of meat for the case on his round. The pets of the prosperous can obtain meat at almost any time, and they will not look, for the moey part, at the wares of the cuts' meat mean But no cat can resist a tasty left of fish he it offered when it may, and a hug success is the result of the innovation. Again, there are certain purveyors wheaks the trouble to obtain a close knowledge once graned, the cats' meat mean buys and cuts his portions accordingly, taking care that each est gets it favorite bilt. All chance of rivality is removed at once by this means, for a cavelli not for weeks, unless driven by despetale hunger, touch the strange cuts of any property of the presen much as a sovereign by restoring a cut to health, while on two orasions he had bee paid five times as much. The "cut pow ders" have not only brought him a regu-lar harvest of coppers for years, but have served as an introduction to some that sands of customers for meat.
